At Last, U.S. Campaign Opens

By Lou Cannon Washington Post Service

ANAHEIM, California - President Ronald Reagan has returned to California, his political homeland, officially begin his re-election campaign in a region that has consistently nourished him with votes, finan-rial support and ideological sustenance:

Mr. Reagan arrived Sunday in Anaheim from Washington to start his campaign with a Labor Day speech to a large rally in Mile High Regional Park, an passis in a land of subdivisions, freeways and shopping

The setting is in deliberate contrast to the one Mr. Reagan chose to begin his 1980 campaign, when he was trying to establish himself with Democratic working-class voters.

Then he opened in Liberty Park, New Jersey, with the Statue of Liberty in the background, before an audience of diverse eithnic backgrounds. On Monday, he returned to his political roots in largely white, nativisi and Republican Orange County.

[In the speech, President Reagan said: "You ain't seen nothing yet." Then be said he would use his campaign "to build a fire of hope that links all of America together." The Associated Press reported.

[With a new national poll showing him as much as 27 points ahead of his Democratic opposition, Mr.
Reagan said he was setting out "to achieve a victory for the future over the past, for opportunity over retreat, for hope over despair and to move up to all that is possible and not down to that which is fear."]

By any measure, southern California in general, and Orange County in particular, is "Reagan country." Twenty years ago, southern California was Mr. Reagan's political starting point and it remains his most

In his speech Monday, Mr. Reagan presented what he called "four great goals to huild our tomorrow," The AP reported.

He pledged continued economic growth without inflation, a nation "today and forever prepared for peace." adherence to "rich traditional values" and a government that seeks new frontiers and does not

"Our joh's not done and that's why we're here," Mr. Reagan said. "But we've made a pretty good start. we can see a future where infla consume us and where people can find new and and disparate issues related to it, including abortion, challenging jobs and where they can finally have some hope that this economy is back on track and America.

Reagan Goes Back to Source Mondale Takes Up the Issue Of Power in Orange County Of Religion and Government

By Bernard Weinraub

MINNEAPOLIS — Walter F. Mondale has charged that the Republicans had "raised doubts whether they respect the wall our founders placed between government and religion."

In a free-swinging, five-minute radio speech Sunday the Decease in providential nomines warned that day, the Democratic presidential nominee warned that mixing religion and politics "will corrupt our faith and divide our nation." Mr. Mondale's comments marked a stepping up of his attack on President Ronald Reagan's recent remark that religion and politics are linked.

In Dallas during the Republican National Conven-tion, Mr. Reagan said at a prayer breakfast: "The truth is, politics and morality are inseparable. And as morality's foundation is religion, religion and politics are necessarily related. We need religion as a guide."

On Sunday, Mr. Reagan defended that statement. Before leaving the White House for a flight to California, The Associated Press reported, Mr. Reagan said: "I was speaking about people who would deny such things as chaplains in the military. I'm not seeking to install a state religion in any way."

install a state religion in any way."

In his paid broadcast, Mr. Mondale also acidly criticized the Republican platform, saying the document provided "only a handful of words about nuclear arms control," promised "tax giveaways" to the rich and offered "no hope for Americans who've been picked on and ripped off."

"I want government to protect the people, not the big boys," he said. Mr. Mondale delivered his speech over WCCO radio here after attending services at Grace Trinity Presbyterian Church. Later, be flew to New York City for dinner with his running mate, Geraldine A. Following his speech, Mr. Mondale beld a brief sidewalk news conference where he brushed aside a question about a nationwide poll, published on Sun-day in the Los Angeles Times, that showed the Demo-that we're talking about, where we want to take this country, is where the American people want to go.

"When this fight begins, the stakes are as high as they've ever been in American history and I believe this is going to start moving towards us and we're going to win this election." At this point Mr. Mondale plainly feels that the religion and politics issue is potentially damaging to the Republicans, and that the president left himself open to attack with his prayer breakfast remarks. Maxine Isaacs, his press secretary, said Mr. Mon-dale was planning to "begin the discussion" of religion and politics in a speech before B'nai B'rith,

"I don't believe that," Mr. Mondale said. "I think those polls are all over the map. And After Chernenko?

Konstantin Chernenko was a sick man perhaps that is why be was ebosen - when he was elevated to the top spot in the Kremlin in February. Since then this 72-year-old heart patient, who has no achievement or even aspiration connected to his name, evidently has gone downhill. He is reported to have been in a Moscow hospital since July, and whether he is conducting his office at all is in some doubt. That doubt is only aggravated when boilerplate statements are repeatedly issued in his name — the Pravda interview Saturday is in that category - while he remains unseen.

What this means from a political standpoint is that the Kremlin elite, which is unaccountable in these matters, is quite possibly on the verge of installing its fourth chief — after Leonid Brezhnev, Yuri Andropov and Mr. Chernenko — in less than twn years. The old guard has steadily refused to repose power in the hands of a vounger man, who presumably would have the requisite time and energy to put his own mark un the structure of Soviet authority. What tension there is to the Chernenko countdown arises precisely from the questinn of whether the likeliest younger man, 53-year-old Mikhail Gorbachov, will make it to the top this time.

Has it made a difference that the leading post in the Kremlin has been occupied through most or all of the Reagan presidency by a dying man? The administration has often hlamed some part of the dismal state of Soviet-American relations on the lack of a strong and active Soviet leader. It has also been putting forward an election-year theory that the Russians have now had time to absorb the lessons President Reagan bas been trying to teach them by his arms policies and assertion of American will and that, being thus chastened, they may be ready to do business with the United States in a second Reagan term.

The self-serving quality of this theory is evident. Still, the Soviet system, being inherently cantious and bureaucratic, needs a strong push from the top to take risky inidatives - and all peaceful initiatives are risky.

The most conspicuous acts of Soviet policy in the past few years have appeared to reflect a conservative consensus or simple negative reflex — cutting off Solidarity, for instance, rearming Syria, shooting down the South Konsensialist between the consensations of the standard stand rean airliner, boycotting the arms talks and the Los Angeles Olympics. All these acts have cost Moscow heavily in its dealings with the United States. They have also helped to build popular support for a hard-line, anti-Soviet president whose policies Moscow professes to find anathema. Some strategy.

Mexico and the Bankers

The new agreements emerging between Mexico and the bankers set a hopeful and welcome precedent in the management of Latin debts. It has been just over two years since the debt crisis began, with Mexico's announcement that it could not fully meet its obligations. From that point until this summer, all of the quick fixes were designed simply to stave off the disaster of default and financial collapse. The current renegotiation is the first to look beyond the emergencies of the moment and to lay out a pattern of manageable payments for the long term.

Both sides were pushed toward this reorga-nization by the dangerous structure of the deht. Contracted in a time of chaotic borrowing in the late 1970s, too much of it was to come due in a short period. The burdens have now been spread out more evenly.

But other important improvements have been made here as well. In the hasty and anxious reschedulings of early 1983, the bankers charged very large premiums in the interest rates of the loans they were extending. There was a hint of panic in the air, and they were demanding high prices to take large risks. Now the sense of risk has abated, and toterest rates are being lowered in proportion.

Mexico has earned this improved treatment by its own vigorous and skillful action to bring its economy back into balance. But that is being accomplished only at substantial cost.

The country has been through an extremely severe two-year recession, far more severe than the last recession in the United States. The Mexican economy is now beginning to grow again, but so far the growth is slow and hesitant in a country that has been accustomed for years to rapid expansion. Mexico's standard of living was being supported by a stream of borrowed money flowing in. With the crisis, that flow stopped as though a faucet had been usually the country of the standard power of turned. In one year the purchasing power of wages dropped about 20 percent.

Even with the new agreements the repayments will be very substantial. To carry that burden and simultaneously return to huoyant growth, the Mexican economy is going to need some of the capital that Mexicans have sent abroad for safety. A massive flight of capital was the immediate cause of the crisis two years ago. To the extent that Mexicans can now be persuaded to reverse that flight and bring their money home, the strains of debt repayment will be made lighter.

The new repayment agreements will also make a contribution here. By establishing an orderly schedule of repayment, they convey a promise of stability that will help induce the expatriate wealth to return. While managing the debts will be difficult, experience so far suggests that, with a little luck and steady nerves, it will not be impossible.

Only 20 percent of eligible voters bothered to take part in a recent election of a chamber meant to represent 600,000 Indians. This followed a meager 30-percent turnout the week before for the chamber representing

2.8 million persons of mixed blood. What South Africa's Prime Munister Pieter W. Botha solemnly calls a "new dispensation" is nothing of the sort.

The essential injustice is hardly mitigated by giving a semblance of power to some non-whites. And the paltry turnout lessens whatever value these chambers might have in bettering South Africa's image. The loudest voice in these elections was the truly silent majority's. -THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The Libya-Morocco Marriage

The tough language used by Colonel [Moamer] Quidhafi in his speech on the recasion of the 15th anniversary of his accession to power will have surprised only those unfamilear with his ritual rhetoric and his current concerns. He had to show his people that the treaty of union with Morocco, which he described as "the leader of the conservative camp" among Arabs, had in no way dilined his hostility toward imperialism and America, his desire to liberate Palestine and Chad.

But in practice, Libya's leader is prudently realistic. American companies continue, un-worriedly, to extract and market Libvan oil. The great development projects in Libva are being carried out by American companies, sometimes to the detriment of their European competitors. There have never been as many American engineers, technicians or managers in Libya. Up from 500 two years ago, there are now 2,000 Americans in the service of the man ism concluded that the excess was justifiable because the spectacle was so grand. It made us feel good. At times, I almost felt myself agreeing. Certainly there is nothing wrnng with loving one's country and rooting for one's learns. But Perhaps it began with Grenada. I was away when U.S. troops went into that little land, and my first reaction was: "Well, Reagan is done for now, Americans are too good, too just, too powerful, to support so bully-like a move." How wrong I was today's brand of patriotism strikes me as sinister. It divides the world into good guys and bad guys, asserts American superiority over everyone else, demands the right to be the best, the strongest and the proudest—and ignores both the consequences and the conditions of athers. As one friend said: "I wish the wrong t was.

so we could beat them, too.

This kind of patriotism is, in so many ways, dangerous. Indeed it is, in the deepest sense, subversive. For one thing, it blinds us, restricts our vision of other societies, depriving us of the richness of their cultures and encouraging us to remain ignorant of their perspectives. For another, it allows Americans to ignore the real world - the time comb of poverty and bunger in half the globe, the resentment caused by America's own unequal trade and banking policies, the loss of respect engendered by the flaunting of U.S.

America is indeed one of the most powerful nations on Earth. But it is not the only nation. Yet the current wave of self-preoccupation allows Secretary of State George P. Shultz to summarily reject New Zealanders' request that the United States tell them if its ships visiting their ports are carrying nuclear weapons. It allows Walter F. Mondale to call for restrictions on Japanese trade without a word about the restrictions' impact on Japan or-the implications of rising protectionism around the world. It allows Ronald Reagan to divide the world toto

George Will and Max Lerner, the syndicated columnists, tell us that great powers must use their military power to defend the national interest and to show that they have the will to enforce their way.

But to have power in a nuclear world, in a world full of inequity and misery, in a world where mod-ern communications networks lead to ever-rising expectations every-where, demands more than a flag-waving use of troops and economic might; more than a self-preoccu-pied desire for even greater power and riches, even at the expense of everyone else. It demands sensitivity to the perspective of all nations. To use power humbly and compassionately, to see ourselves as other see us, and to see others as they would like to be seen, is not only nuble and just — it is smart. Narrow-minded, self-seeking pa-triotism or chauvinism will undermine a nation, leading it toto actions that alienate others - and, in the end, isolating it and threatening its own prosperity and security.

National pride is essential. Waving the flag can be fun — and reas-suring. But if such attitudes are symptomatic of a return to simplistic. we're-the-best chanvinism, they also are dangerous — unworthy of a nation that desires to be great.

The writer, an associate professor of history at Wittenberg College, spent the past year in Tokyo. He contributed this view to The New York Times.

awakening of a feeling of pride in a nation that gave an opportunity to all its athletes, young men and women, rich and poor, white and black. The T-shirt of decathlon winner Daley Thompson probably got it right, thanking America for good Games "and a good time." But he forgot the most important thing: America needs to trust to itself once again. At the closing ceremonies, the Frenchman Alain Mismoun, marathon winner at the 1956 Melbourne Games, expressed my feelings when he said: "Thank you; America. While Mr. Reagan will be seen on the evening news, supposedly talking to the American people in front of carefully chosen backdrops, be will be effectively isolated from the give-and-take of real campaigning and from questions he might be asked by the traveling news media.

His White House managers have co-opted the Secret Service for purposes that bave nothing to do with the president's security, reduced reporters to the unwilling role of props and contemptuously treated the president as a communicator in constant need of a keeper.

When a president travels, he is accompanied by a small, rotating "pool" of reporters representing each segment of the media. The system rarely produces profound dialogues but does provide a framework for day-to-day exchanges between the candidates. Often, a candidate's answer to a sensitive question reveals more than does a carefully cases, they are concerned that he will dive in over his head on an issue in which he is ill-prepared. Usually, as one White House official put it, the concern is simply that a forthright answer will "eradicate the theme of the day," decided to advance by the president's staff.

One of the things the president's staff is doing to prevent Mr. Reagan from losing the fall election is keeping the press pool out of the president's hearing range — where it is unable to ask questions.

But the White House staff wants to be certain that visuals of Mr. Reagan are first-rate. Last week at Goddard Space Flight Center, photographers were allowed to approach the president while reporters were kept out of questioning range.

Service acted courageously in that incident,
But the White House staff is trading on this reputation, and damaging it, when it diverts the Secret Service from protecting the president to providing what the ABC News correspondent Sam Donaldson calls "political security." This happened recently in Sedalia, Missouri, where the Secret Service allowed Mr. Reagan to shake hands with strangers but closed to quickly on reporters who tried to question him.

The staff was particularly sensitive at that time because of Mr. Reagan's ill-starred joke about bombing the Soviet Union.

When the staff wants reporters near Mr. Rea-gan, it is a different story. The Secret Service parted like the Red Sea to let the press pool through in Hoboken, New Jersey, when Mr. Rea-gan's advisers wanted him seen appealing to Ital-ian-American voters in a Roman Catholic church. What is involved, as some agents acknowledge privately, is not security but political protection of the president. "They take their cue from Mike Deaver and Nancy Reagan and the others at the top," said Mr. Donaldson, Mr. Deaver is the White House deputy chief of staff.

All of this should be troublesome even to Americans who distrust the news media. Mr. Reagan holds news conferences less frequently than any other modern president. He sees fewer people than most presidents and delegates more authority. He is the most protected by his staff.

At a time when he supposedly is taking his case to the American people, Mr. Reagan is being deliberately isolated by a staff that wants to take no risks. How isolated would be be in a second term, when he and his staff would be beyond reach likelier arise from the escalation of a crisis than from conscious policy, he would work on nuclear "rules of the road" to improve "command stability" and reduce the incentive for preptive attack and blind escalation. He would ban short-time-of-flight weapons and restrict deployments of systems that can reach national command centers - systems such as the Soviet submarines off the American coast and the new U.S. Pershing-2s in Western Europe. These weapons threatening to decapitate the national command structure in a few minutes' time, create tremendous pressures on the threatened command to launch its missiles as soon as any sign of attack is detected, and to pre-delegate authority to military commanders to fire on their own.

"There can be no absolute guarantees of security in the nuclear age."
Mr. Bracken concludes, "but there path to both security and survival lies through understanding how to man-age and govern those forces." The Washington Post.

Americans Have a Right to Fiddle With the Constitution

WASHINGTON — The first U.S. constitution, the Articles of Confederation, did not work because it could not be changed. The nation's founders tinkered with that document in 1785 but left the Annapolis meeting in frustration.

Prodded by a couple of red-hor revolutionaries — the little guy was James Madison and the handsome devil was Alexander Hamilton - the organizers of the newly independent collection of states came together to Philadelphia to take another crack at fixing the Articles, lest public dissarislaction with its weaknesses lead to a me the convention mode seems prefbreakup of the government.

At that point, the delegates sent by the states decided to exceed their authors that the people became thority most egregiously. They became a runaway convention, tore up the old Articles and wrote a whole new constitution.

This one, however, would be flexible enough to accommodate the need for change. The first trick was to make the method of amendment hard enough to require a national agreement over a period of time, but not so difficult as to lock in the status quo. The second trick was to involve the national government — Congress -in the amending process, but not to let the representatives block the will of the people if the nation's problem was in the Congress.

The solution was ingenious. Onemethod of amendment was set up requiring two-thirds of the Congress to pass an amendment, with threeBy William Safire fourths of the states needed to ratify. If Congress failed to meet the need for change, a second method was spelled out in Article V: "Or, on the application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, [Congress] shall call a Convention for proposing Amendments."

"Shall" meant "damn well will." In Madison's words, "then it is out of the power of Congress to decline complying. A century later, Abraham Lincoln told the nation that "to erable to that it allows amendments

In 1912, the people became tired of the Congress's refusal to let senators be elected directly, rather than by state legislatures. A convention move began; as the number of states calling for the convention approached with-in one of two-thirds. Congress passed the amendment to avert being furced to call a constitutional convention.

Now the monster again approaches the gates. Thirty-two states have voted to call a convention to amend the Constitution to require Congress to balance the budget. Only judicial rinky-dink stopped Californians from forcing legislative approval this fall, and it is likely that two other states will provide the two-thirds needed by next year.

Washington's power brokers feel offended; who are the people to pressure them so? They cannot grasp that this was precisely what Hamilton and Madison had in mind. The message from the Founding Fathers is to pass demand for change — in this case, an that amendment or the convention end to huge borrowing — the people will pass it for you. As a scare tactic, congressmen point to the "s" on the word "amend-convention crazies might repeal the Bill of Rights and substitute antiabortion, pro-school prayer amend-ments as well as the designated balanced-budget proposal.

The scare's basis is quite reasonable. The "Constitutional Convention Implementation Act of 1984." which the Senate Judiciary Committee has just reported out, makes a great point of limiting the possible convention to the subject at hand, a balanced-budget amendment. But everyone remembers what the Founders did to the Articles at the first convention, and nobody can-guarantee that the delegates will not run away" again.

Stop worrying. Delegates to a Constitutional Convention II would be elected in each congressional district and state by the people, and would include no more rurts and kooks than usual. Any amendment or amendments passed would then have to be ratified by three-fourths of the states.

Trust the system that trusts the people. A new constitutional convention might discombobulate the per-

Diplomats will refer to it when claiming Soviet readiness to negotiate complete disarmament at the United Nations General Assembly; newspapers will cite it when attacking the United States in editorials and commentaries and Soviet leaders will draw authority from it when invoking the dangers of the international situation.

The structure of Soviet power is such that policy must appear at all times to flow from the top and Mr. Chernenko's interview, published on the day schools opened, seemed intended to provide what a diplomat termed a season opener, a key-note statement that would set the tone and shape of a vital field of

But for Western diplomats who ransacked the interview for answers to major questions - the prospects of warmer relations with President Ronald Reagan, the fu-ture of nuclear arms talks, the true state of Mr. Chernenko's health the statement offered little beyond a few ambivalent formulations.

The interview opened with some harsh comments on the Reagan administration. Mr. Chernenko said the U.S. leadership was obsessed with force and was losing a sense of reality, adding that it was expanding its crusade against socialism to the entire world. This has been something of a fixture in official Soviet thinking for many months.

Then Mr. Chernenko dropped an intriguing nidbit. If the United States agreed to Moscow's proposed package on banning weapons in outer space, be said, such an agreement would not only prevent the arms race in outer space but would also facilitate the solution of questions of limiting and reducing other strategic armaments.

Druze Rally Keeps Flame of Sectarianism Bright

By John Kilner New York Times Service

BEIT EDDIN, Lebanon - The old men danced proudly in a circle in their baggy Druze trousers, fierce mustaches bristling worn leather bandoliers crisscrossing their chests, brandishing long rifles or old curved swords.

A small drum beat faster, a mountaineer's pipe shrilled and the men shouted happily, pantomim-ing battles. Around them, younger men, many in brand-new camouflage fatigues and leaning against. Soviet-supplied T-54 tanks, smiled indulgently at the dancers, who had fought against what is remembered in this part of Lebanon as an attempted Christian takeover in

The event Sunday was a Druze rally here in the Chur Mountains to bonor their marryrs. The Shiite Moslems had one on Friday and the Maronite Catholics had one earlier last week, and the ceremony Sunday emphasized not only the deepening chasms between the sectarian communities but the bitter continuity of history that divides this land. The crowd included many sheikhs of the Druze religion and some officers from the Lebanese Army's new Druze 11th Brigade, as well as numbers of people recording the scene on home video cam-

For the 1984 Winter Olympics in Sarajevo, Philips designed and installed the lighting systems for most of the sports complexes, using computer simulation techniques to ensure that the systems would meet both athletes' and spectators' sight requirements.

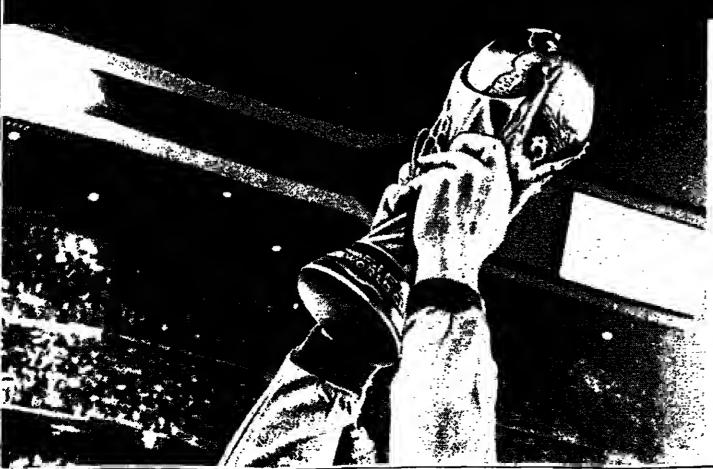

The 70 metre ski-jump, for example, required unique design features to concentrate the light along the flight path between take-off and landing point. The lighting was also designed for colour television transmission and 22 Philips television cameras were in use throughout the games.

Not surprisingly. Philips proven expertise in this specialised area of lighting sporting events is also used in the Calgary Saddledrome, planned site of the skating and hockey competitions of the 1988 Winter Olympics in Calgary, Canada.

The 1986 World Cup Soccer competition will take place in Mexico. Televisa, the largest Latin American television corporation, will provide facilities for the world-wide broadcast of this event. They have recently signed an order with the Philips company Pye TVT for a new broadcasting

The Associated Press LONDON -- The first part of a collection of more than 1,000 letters to two Finrentine merchants in England at the end of the 16th century will be auctioned Tuesday at Christie's.

The letters, dated between 1569 and 1601, were sent to Philip and Bartholomew Corsini, who ran the largest export-import business of their day from Gratious Street now Gracecourch Street - in the City of London.

The letters, from about 340 correspondents, record dealings in German sword blades, Indian spices, silk from China, wheat, wine, tin, herrings, paint and wool. They have been photographed for London's Guildhall Library.

Japanese Currency Traders Benefit From Rule's End

By KEITH STAFFORD

OKYO — Japanese corporate foreign-exchange traders are taking more advantage of the abolition of the realdemand rule in the Tokyo market six months ago, but the impact so far has not been dramatic, foreign-exchange-market sources said.

The rule required forward, or futures, foreign-exchange transactions to be supported by evidence of trade or remittance

It was abolished on April 1 as part of Japan's commitment to more deregulation of its financial markets.

For some time after the abolition, market dealers reported little noticeable change, with many saying that Japan's corporate "Their action tends to have a noticeable impact on the spot rate when the market is thin or banks do not want to take large positions, as in this summer's thin market."

However, the manager of the foreign-exchange department of one major trading company said that since the abolition provides trading firms with more varied alternatives in the market, position management has become more important. Foreign-exchange dealers said when the rule was abolished, corporations that were not careful could encounter bad speculative losses, so the key to future expansion would lie in better treasury management.

Mr. Naito said this is now coming about, adding: "Japanese manufacturing companies are clearly becoming more sophisticated in foreign-exchange activity."

Appropriations Rise to Record

NEW YORK — The largest U.S. manufacturing companies appro-priated a record $37.1 billion in the second quarter, foreshadowing a strong jump in capital spending, the Conference Board reported

The motor-vehicle industry fueled the strong gain in capital appropriations, nearly tripling their showing over the previous quarter.
Capital appropriations are authorizations to spend money in the future for new plant and equipment. They precede the ordering of equipment, the letting of construction contracts, and finally the actuall expenditures. Appropriations al expenditures. Appropriations are a leading indicator for capital

The hefty increase in auto industry spending plans "reflects the ap-propriation of sizable funds to support new model programs and to some degree an effort to catch up on projects that were slowed or suspended during the weak years of the early 1980s," the board said.

industry, overall appropriations by the 1,000 largest U.S. manufactur-ing concerns rose by a healthy 12 percent over the first quarter, the strongest gain of the five recent quarterly increases.

But even excluding the motor

The 1,000 largest companies pro-ject appropriations to climb by 20 percent for all of 1984, the board said, and they expect actual spend-ing to rise by 25 percent.

"While this forecast is considerably more optimistic than the survey released several months ago by the Commerce Department, the fact that capital spending by the largest companies fell 23 percent in 1983 provides the basis for a stronger rebound this year," according to the Conference Board, which is a nonprofit business research organi-

Newsprint Makers Learn a Lesson

Mills Are Increasing

By R.B. Lynch

New York Times Service

NEW YORK — In 1981 MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. added the first new newsprint machine in 10 years at its Powell River plant in British Columbia. Like many of its competitors, this Vancouverbased forestry-products company was expanding in response to what had been a severe shortage of newsprint in western North America from mid-

Such a move seemed sound at the time, but for MacMillan Bloedel and other expansion-minded producers it turned out to be a costly mistake. Before long the recession stalled consumption, while newsprint production capacity soared and operating rates fell. During the industry's 1982-83 stump recession process plummeted.

"Part of the problem is our crystal balls aren't always correct." said Eric Launizen, vice presi-

Today, North American newsprint mills are again running at near capacity amid a strong surge in U.S. newsprint consumption. This time the producers are not expanding; they are raising prices.

The latest industrywide price increase went into effect July 1, when producers in eastern Canada raised the price of newsprint 7 percent, to $535 a metric ton, from $500. With no shortages expected "Demand has now caught up with capacity," "Demand has now caught up with capacity," said George B. Adler, a paper products analyst at . Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co. "That generally means that operating rates are better than they have been for long period of time. We have a good balance right now, so prices are going up."

Newsprint consumption in the United States in the first half of 1984 was up 9.4 percent from a year earlier, according to the American Paper Institute, a trade association. Traditionally, newsprint consumption has grown 2 to 3 percent a year.

Canadian producers have benefited the most

Canadian producers have benefited the most from the price increase, according to the paper institute, because they account for 65 percent of all North American newsprint capacity and 56 per-cent of all newsprint shipments to the United States. Canadian newsprint production in July soared 18 percent above the level of July 1983, the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association reported last week, setting what is believed to be a record for output in a single month.

Industry analysts attribute the rise in newsprint consumption to a boom in newspaper advertising linage, which they say is usually closely tied to an economic recovery.

Brooke Rejects Unilever; Barlow Courts Bibby

By Bob Hagerty International Herald Tribine

LONDON - Britain's takeover fever remained high Monday as Barlow Rand Ltd. approached J. Bibby & Sons PLC, an animal-feed maker, and Brooke Bond Group PLC rejected a bid from Unilever

Barlow, South Africa's biggest industrial company, said it was holding talks that may lead to a takeover bid for Liverpool-based Bibby. That news sent Bibby shares soaring 62 pence to close at 293 pence, giving the company a stock market value of £267 million ($347 million).

Tiger Oats & National Milling Co., which is owned 30 percent by Barlow, has a 29-percent stake in Bibby. Brooke Bond, a London-based tea and timber company, described Unilever's cash offer of £355 million, or 114 pence a share, as "unal-tractive, considering Brooke Stake in New Bond's profits and prospects."

The Unilever bid, announced Sunday evening, topped an earlier offer from Tate & Lyle PLC, a big British sugar producer. Tale, whose bid also has been rejected by Brooke's management, is offering one of its shares plus 350 pence for every seven Brooke shares. Based on the closing price of 383 pence for Tate shares, the bid currently values Brooke at £327 million, or 105 pence a share. Brooke shares closed Monday at 117 pence, up 7 pence from Friday. That left the shares 3 pence above Unilever's bid, suggesting that the market expects a higher offer.

Traders speculated that General Frods Corp. or another LLS food

Unilever, which snapped up 4.8 percent of Brooke's shares before announcing its public offer, argued elsewhere in Asia. Citibank is huythat its tea business would complement that of Brooke.

Through its Thomas J. Lipton unit, Unilever has a large share of rencies, as a cautious step, with the authorities mindful of the need to avoid a return to the soaring inflation that dogged the economy in 1981 and 1982.

Mannesmann Says Sales Rose 12% in First Half

By Warren Getler International Herold Tribune

DUSSELDORF - Manoesmann, the West German engineering group, said Monday that group sales rose 12 percent to 7.03 billion Deutsche marks ($2.44 billion) in the first half of 1984 from 6.28 billion DM a year earlier. It said earnings improved but still were not satisfactory.

In the company's internal news-letter, Rohr Post, Mannesmann said that all divisions, with the exception of the core steel-pipe making operation, improved sales, chiefly because of strong demand from abroad.

Revenue from foreign subsidiaries, including a steel and pipe-making unit in Brazil, rose 68 percent to 2.45 billion DM, while domestic operations showed only a 4-percent increase to 5.54 billion DM from 5.3 billion

5.3 billion. Exports jumped 16 percent in the first half to 3.2 billion DM from 2.7 billion DM, lifting exports' share of sales to 58 percent for the first half, compared with 52 percent for last year as a whole. The company said the first half showed little resurgence of domestic demand for capital goods.

Last year, Mannesmann saw its consolidated earnings drop to 96 million DM from 280 million DM and it sales sink 15 percent to 5.38 billioo DM, maioly as a result of heavy losses from pipe operations. Earlier this year the company announced that it would be slashing production of large-diameter steel pipes by a third beginning this month.

Overall pipe production in the first half increased by 2 percent to 1.5 million metric tons from 1.47 million a year earlier, but produc-

The company reported a loss of 93 million Canadian dollars ($71.6 million at current exchange rates)

To reduce costs, Mr. Laurizen said, the company cut the staff in its headquarters to 700 from 1,200. Remaining funds for capital expen-ditures were used to rebuild the company's mills and modernize machinery.

MacMillan Bloedel's experience has mirrored that of most other newspriot producers, analysts say.

THE FIGURES CONTINUE TO RISE

It is still less than one year since AEGON was formed by merging the substantial resources and expertise of two major Dutch insurance companies.

The first half-year results of AEGON acting as a single company amply justify its foundation.

Gross receipts in the first half-year of 1984 rose further by 12% to Df. 4.9 billion, compared to the same period in 1983. Of these 47% originated abroad. Net profits for the first half year 1984 amounted to Dfl. 132 million, an increase of 12% compared with the first six months of 1983. Guarantee funds rose by Dfl. 118 million in the first half year 1984 to Dfl. 2.3 billion.

We are confident that, unless there are unforeseen circumstances, gross receipts and net profit will show further increases during the second half-year. Although there is likely to be further conversion of outstanding convertible loans into Ordinary Shares we also expect greater improvement in profit per share. This expectation is in complete accordance with our view of the future expressed in the 1983 Annual Report.

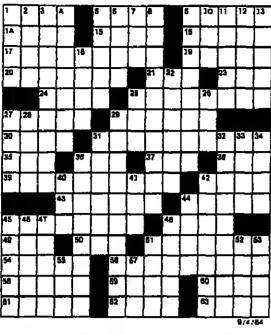

AEGON shares are quoted on the Amsterdam, London, Basle, Geneva and Zurich stock exchanges. In addition options on AEGON shares are traded on the European Options Exchange in Amsterdam.

DOS PASSOS: A Life

By Virginia Spencer Carr. Illustrated. 624 pp. $24.95. Doubleday, 245 Park Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10167.

Reviewed by Herbert Mitgang

THE life of John Dos Passos (1896-1970) I spanned the excitement and creativity of the first half of the 20th century. At the time of his death, at 74, some people were surprised to learn that he was still alive. In a literary sense, his death had been decreed by critics during the last two decades of his life. He was considered a museum piece, a totem admired behind glass but not to be touched. Three American writers of his generatioo - Hemingway, Faulkner and Steinbeck — bad received the Nobel Prize in literature. Dos Passos, ooce considered their equal, received only diminishing respect.

Virginia Spencer Carr's "Dos Passos: A Life" is a diligent job of archaeological spadework with few shards left unturned. Nothing is discarded. Yet any admirer of the novelist's early achievements can be grateful for ber hiography as a reference, though not an interpretive, work. It might serve to inspire the unfamiliar reader and discover his lasting nov-

— "The 42nd Parallel" (1930), "1919" (1932) and "The Big Moocy" (1936).

Long before all the talk of nonfiction novels. Dos Passos broke the ground. He used cinematic techniques, juxtaposed real and imagined people and conversations, reinvented words as an American Joyce. Truman Capote's
"Io Cold Blood" and E. L. Doctorow's "Ragtime," built upon the trailblazing of Dos Passos. In "U.S.A." Dos Passos combined fictional men and women from different walks of life.

minibiographies of heroes and scoundrels.

Carr divides Dos Passos' life into sections: his youth, when he began life as "Jack Madison," an illegitimate child of a wealthy New York lawyer-businessman; as John R. Dos Passos Is legitimatized going to Harrard Passos, Jr., legitimetized, going to Harvard, with the Ambulance Corps during World War I, his radical writings during the postwar years and the Depression, his break with the Left after the Spanish Civil War, and his conservative views and writings after World War II when his career was in decline.

Among the more ephemeral essays cited here are those he wrote for the National Review and elsewhere, hlaming the protesting youth oo campus for the defeats in the Viet-nam War and praising President Nixon for nam war and praising resident Niton for invading Cambodia. After reproaching Dos Passos for a review-essay in National Review, his old friend, Edmund Wilson, wrote him: "You've been railing against 'the liberals' all your life, and my impression is that your conception of them is a projection of some suppressed alter ego that yoo perpetually feel you have to discredit."

His 1952 trilogy, "District of Columbia," included "Adventures of a Young Man" (1939), "Number One" (1943) and "The Grand Design" (1949). It did not come close to "U.S.A." as art. In fairness, Carr cites positive and oegative reviews oo this and other works, but she herself does not interpret for the reader why his radical years produced his best work and his conservative years his worst. One critic, writing about. "Midcentury," published in 1961, summed up Dos Passos in decline: "The mind is that of a cultivated man of good will. But the fires are banked."

This is a semiauthorized book, written with the cooperation of Dos Passos' widow, who provided materials and, as the author ootes, upon my request she also read the manuscrip and offered suggestions where she felt I had erred in fact or ouance." The perils of having a book examined by a protective family are apparent in this useful, but deferential, biogra-

The Voices of the Open

VANTAGE POINT/Jane Gross

New York Times Service NEW YORK - Listen to the voices at the National Tennis Center, a 16-acre asphalt jungle in Queens and bome of the U.S. Open, the only major tourna-ment played in a public park.

They are different from the bushed voices heard when this tournament was played at the Casino in Newport, Rhode Island, at the Germantown Cricket Club in Philadelphia or at the West Side Tennis Club in Forest Hills. They are the voices of a sport that is no longer limited to the grass courts of countryclub settings, no longer played exclusively by privileged ath-letes before privileged crowds. They are New York voices.

Take an exchange involving a group of young men in box seats in Louis Armstrong Stadi-um, in Flushing Meadows-Corona Park. They are watching Ivan Lendl play Brian Teacher and are comparing their own weekend games to those of two top-rung professionals. One of them poses the Walter Mitty question that is heard over and swers, rat-a-tat. "If you played these guys in 50 games, 100 games, do you think you'd get a game off them?

over here; then come the an-

"Not even in 1,000 games."
"You couldn't even get a game off Martina Navratilova." On a hot afternoon in the stadium here, a group of bareehested men study the passing fashion parade, a serendipitous mix of lattered shorts and Tshirts, designer cluthes and

Madison Avenue garb. "I can't believe anybody would wear a neckue," said one, gesturing toward a coun-try-club type, "It's not like anybody's serving dinner."

Late-summer bumidity turns white tennis shirts translucent with sweat. The pavement is sticky underfoot. Airplanes leave La Guardia Airport flying so low you can read the lettering on their sides, and they often drown out conversation. City folk who would never consider going to a country-club tournament bellow praise and blame from the bleachers and use sharp, flashing elbows when battling for places in concession lines or by the side of a court.

A man at an ice eream counter sees his late-arriving wife at the end of a long line. He asks what she wants, then places an order for both of them —one mocha fudge, one vanilla Oreo — and is booed. "Kids do that!" says a woman waiting her turn. "Tbat's frontsybacksy, and that's rude!"

The players are not immune to the conditions. "It feels like a victory just making it to the locker room," said Navratilova, who keeps an apartment in Manhattan. "I can't go any place without being clawed. But that's New York, isn't it? I fee that walking down the street."

Notable this year is the increase in black spectators at the open, a change that cannot be statistically supported but is clear to anyone visiting the courts where eight talented black Americans have played in this tournament.

Tennis has slowly opened itself to black players, and their rise has spurred attendance by black fans who loyally come back day after day and dominate the bleachers when their favorites are playing. One of these regulars, Sam Hamilton (his hat advertises Fast Eddie's Place - Warm Beer, Lousy Food"), acknowledged that the National Tennis Center was a facility that made him feel welcome. "All our players developed from parks programs," he said, "and this is a public park. It's not stuffy like tennis used to be."

MONTREAL (AP) - Goalie Vladimir Myshkin stopped 20 shots, while Mikhail Varnakov scored once and set up another goal here Sunday night, leading the Soviet Union to a 3-0 victory over Czechoslovakia in the first round of the Canada Cup hockey tournament.

After a tight-checking opening 20 minutes, Vladimir Krutov beat goalie Dominik Hasek with a five-footer at :22 of the second period.

Varnakov made it 2-0 at 7:15 of the third when he picked off an errant clearing pass and scorched a shot past Hasek's stick side. On a 3-on-2 hreak, Varnakov passed to Vladimir Kovin, who relayed the puck to Alexander Skyortsov for a 25-footer that beat Hasek at 12:13.

Cooking the Numbers

WaSHINGTON — I received hring it in at $174 billion when you have to feed the whole country?" Office of Management and Budget who said he had been asked to cook up a new batch of deficits for the elections.

"Nobody's here so it's O.K. for you to come over."

I found him in the OMB's test kitchen where they try out every new recipe before packaging it for the public. "Here," he suid. "Put these your eyes."

"What are they?" I asked. 'Rose-colored glasses. Everyone in the administration is Buchwald required to wear them when cooking up government numbers."

"What's in the pot?" I asked him.

Our new figures for the cam-paign. It looks like we're only going to have a $174-billion budget defi-cit instead of the $200 billion that we originally predicted."
"It smells fishy." f said. That's just because I put in tremendous portions of gross national product and added large tax revethis year. It tastes delicious." He gave me a spoon and I tried nues, which we hadn't counted on

"It's not bad. But after all. you've only cooked this for the Reagan people. Will you be able to

'Lost' Song by Strauss Found in Estate Papers

TONDON — An unpublished and unperformed song by the German composer Richard Strauss has been discovered after his family presumed it had been lost. The Times newspaper reported.

gave it to the Czechoslovak soprano Maria Jeritza.

The Times on Saturday said the song would be sold at Sotheby's auction house in New York in December as part of the estate of Jeri- asked. tza, who died there last year at the age of 96, leaving no heirs.

No question about it. For one thing we took out all the fat in government spending. With the economy really cooking along, interest rates ought to drop. The only thing that could spoil the recipe is if Congress keeps adding more ingredients than we need. If we can stick with what we've got we can reduce the deficits to a measly $139 hillion by 1989."

"Have you added any new income taxes to the recipe for the next year?"

"Not at the moment. The president can't digest anything that has new income taxes in it. The last time we served him a deficit stew with taxes in it he spat it out and fired the chef."

"So you really think you can cook up a dish of deficits for $174 billion without adding any new tax-

"We can for the election, but we're Reeping our options open for 1985. We might have to throw in a federal sales tax or a value added tax, but we're not going to announce it until after November."

"I still don't know how you created this so fast," I said.

"When you're cooking numbers you have to go on certain assumptions. For example, I figure that by adding optimism the real growth in the pot will increase by 4 percent each year until 1989. Inflation will simmer at around 4 percent and that means the government's borrowing rate will be reduced to 5.1 percent. That should make your mouth water."

Mondale says those are unrealistic assumptions." "What else would he say? He wants to he president. If he makes it, which we all doubt, he'll cook the figures just the way we have." "He says you have a secret recipe for deficies that you're not telling the American people about, and Strauss composed the song what you're cooking up now is "Malven," his last work, in 1949, some voodoo stew that even Reamonths before he died at age 84. He gan's economic advisers can't

"It's not worthy of comment," the OMB man said. He then sprinkled 100 large folders into the pot.
"What did you just add?" 1

"Defense contracts. That's what gives the deficit its rich taste."

A Japanese Novelist Writes It Her Way

By Christine Chapman International Herald Tribune

TOKYO - "To be a woman alone is 1 becoming more and more common," said Yuko Tsushima, whose successful novel "Child of Fortune" has added a new character to Japanese literarure: the single mother who refuses the help of family and lovers and insists on living her own way.

"Ten years ago divorce meant failure, especially for the woman," Tsushima observed recently in her Tokyo office. "Now it doesn't have such a bad image. In my son's class at school, out of 30 mothers, 10 are single mothers, all working and living with their children. I know 20 women in that position. In 10 percent of the cases their husbands died, 20 percent are unmarried, and 70 percent have had an ordinary divorce." When she was 29. Tsushima had an "ordinary divorce," from the man whom she married when she was 25 and pregnant with her

Her divorce may be the only ordinary thing about her. With talent and courage, Tsushi-ma, 37, brings a measure of reality to her portrayal of Japanese women.

The protagonist of "Child of Fortune," 36-year-old Koko Mizuno, is an anti-heroine, a woman who can he self-indulgent, even slov-enly, a reluctant mother whose teen-age daughter turns away from her impracticality to an aunt's conventional home. Divorced Koko is a woman who welcomes sexual relations with male friends but regards the men as somehow alien. Like her family, they want her to conform to their idea of how a woman should behave.

Koko is caught between the need to be understood and the knowledge that it is impossible. Although she works, she becomes increasingly passive and aimless until she believes she is pregnant. Her unborn child provides her with an emotional focus and a sense of purpose.

Young Japanese women sympathize with Koko: older women are appalled.
As Tsushima said: "A women's circle out in the provinces said they found her unrealistie. They said they'd never heard of such a woman who was so selfish, living so much as she wanted to. But younger city women don't feel like that. They say they understand, that this represents how they feel." Considered by critics as a "representative writer of her generation" and by some as the top woman writer in Japan, Tsushima is an articulate woman whose self-confidence is well-carned. Over the past few years, she has written several prize-winning novels and

Born in Tokyo in 1947, Tsushima, whose real given name is Satoko, was the daughter of a novelist, Osamu Dazai, and his wife, Michiko. A major in English literature at Shirayuri Women's College, she began to write when she was 17, and has been able to support herself, her 12-year-old daughter and 7-year-old son after winning critical recogni-

"I won my first prize around the time I was pregnant with my son. It brought a small amount of money, but, more important, people wanted me to write for their magazines." She also writes essays, film reviews, stories when "Choji," or "Child of Fortune," appeared in 1978, it won the Women's Literature Prize. Io 1983, it was translated into English by Geraldine Harcourt for Kodansha International. "Hikari no ryobun," (Domain of Light), which is now being translated by Australia's Canterbury University Press, won the prestigious Noma Prize. A collection of short stories. "Danmari ichi" (Silent Traders), won the Yasunari Kawabata Prize. Tsushima's latest novel, "Hi no kawa no hotori ni" (By the River of Fire), is being considered for film adaptation.

Tsushima's style depends on extended images and dream sequences that may not adapt easily to the screen. In "Child of Fortune," the central image is Koko's pregnancy, which turns out to be faise. The "phantom pregnan-cy," as Tsushima describes it, gives Koko's life meaning for a while, but when she discovers the truth, she is forced to change.
"In spite of the imagery," Tsushima grinned, "I'm a realistic writer. 'Child of Fortune is autobingraphical. "The hig question for women in Japan today is finding their own way of life. Many are playing their role of housewife or single girl. They are too involved in their roles to know how to be free."

"Child of Fortune" evoked a popular response, according to Tsushima, because its theme of communication aroused women to react. "Before 'Child of Fortune,' writers wrote about women who didn't speak their feelings, who didn't want to be independent. Ever since I was a little girl, I was not satisfied with that kind of beroine."

"Readers tend to think a novel is a novel, real life is real life. They think writers belong to a different world. As a writer, I aim for intimacy with my readers, but few Japanese men understood Koko's story, or accept her way of living."

Tsushima's father may have understood, Osamu Dazai killed himself in a love-suicide pact in 1948 when Tsushima was only 1 year old. Dazai, his pen name, was the avant-garde spokesman for Japan's lost generation of intellectuals and artists, out of sorts with themselves and their defeated country. His two novels, "The Setting Sun" and "No Longer Human," provided the literary metaphors for the late 1940s and described a formerly affluent upper class that could not adjust to the new Japan.

Dazai seemed to be writing his own scenario as he depicted a protagonist who was an alcoholie womanizer full of self-loathing. When he was 39, he drowned himself with one of his mistresses. Knowing something about her father's life made Tsushima "aware of my blood," as she put it.

"My image of what a man should be was much larger than life. I dreamed of a man who would love me without questions, would always be higger, protective and understand-ing. The women I write about have that kind of expectation, but my books nearly always start from the point of disillusionment. The women have the awareness of being stronger than the men yet they are not completely liberated and in control."

Tsushima is now planning a novel set 1,000 years ago, in the Heian period, "Were the relations between men and women then better or worse? she asked. The same things happened, but the time difference may make them seem different. Today men still have much more freedom than women. That comes from our historical background, the feudal system, and also from the Western ways that influenced Japan 100 years ago."

Tsushima smiled: "The West emphasized the man's way of thinking. But in the past 10 years there has been a big change of attitude. We can't chart our lives according to society's image of what perfection should be."

On the way to the bospital Friday, Dali reportediy stopped at the art museum named after him in Figueras, to view a display dedicated to his wife, Gala, who died in 1982.

The tenor Luciano Pavarotti canceled his scheduled appearance in the opening of the San Francisco Opera's fall season and traveled to New York to be with his teen-age daughter, who is being hospitalized for an undisclosed ailment. Pavarotti was to sing the title role of "Ernani" Friday, when his daughter, Giuliana, 17, is scheduled for major surgery in New York, according to the singer's manager, Herbert Breslin.

Andrea Albert of Monaco, son of Princess Caroline and the Italian businessman Stefano Casiraghi, was baptized Saturday by the bishop of Monaco in a private ceremoop of Monaco in a private ceremony held in the family palace chapel, a palace spokesman said. Caroline's sister Stephanie, and Casiraghi's brother Marco, were named godparents. The child, born June 8, holds no princely title and could acceed to the throne only if his mother died after taking the throne herself. . . Emily Black Kennedy, the wife of Robert F. Soviet-born conductor Mstisler Rostropovich has received the "Life in Music" prize from the Homage to Venice association. The prize has been given in the past to such musicians as the guitarist Andres Segu-via, the pianist Arthur Rubinstein and conductor Karl Böhm. Rostropovich, music director of the Washington National Symphony was given a silver plaque decorated with a golden cello and a glass lion during the award ceremony. The lion is the symbol of Venice. Later in the ceremony, Rostropovich met with loud applause as he led the Italian Radio Orchestra of Turin in a concert in which he was featured as both conductor and cellist.

Sean Connery, the star of seven James Bond spy movies, is suing MGM&UA Entertainment Co. producer Albert Broccoli and two of Broccoli's companies for $225 million, because he says they failed to pay him in full for five of those films: "Diamonds Are Forever,"
"Goldfinger," "Thunderhall,"
"You Only Live Twice" and "From Russia With Love." The only two he didn't sue over were "Dr. No," first of the series, and "Never Say Never Again," his last. The suit, filed June 20 in U.S. District Court in Los Angeles alleges that from March 1979 to November 1983, the film company withheld from in-forex, which collects profits for Connery, at least $300,000 in profits and held back another $975,000 masse, France, allowed the wind to from March 1979 to July 1982.
